Although Bolex had no Super 8 camera to offer in 1965, when the new film guage was introduced by Kodak, it was relatively quick in redesigning the 18-5 projector to accomodate it. It would be another two years before they introduced their first Super 8 camera, the Bolex 150. The 18-5 Super featured completely automatic loading from reel to reel.

I bought a Bolex 18-5L a few months ago. These are great little Super 8mm silent projectors. Sturdy built...very quiet...very steady picture. However the one I got didn't have a power cord and it not only had that expensive spaceman bulb...but this bulb had a funky base you just can't find anymore.

Paillard Bolex was slow to introduce a Super 8 camera although they quickly modified the 18-5 Auto 8mm projector for Super 8 as the 18-5 L. At about this time (1966) the Bolex 16 Pro Camera was introduced to compete with the Arriflex 16 BL camera, as a technically advanced professional camera more suited for television use than the H-16.
